

Annual Buffalo Slaughter to Start November First

If weather conditions are favorable the round-up for the fall buffalo slaughter will take place around the first of November.

At the present time there are approximately seven thousand buffalo in the park, out of these two thousand will be slaughtered this fall. The department are calling for tenders for both meat and hides. Plans are being made for the repair of the different corrals, to have them in shape to carry out the work this fall.

For the round-up, about eighteen men will be employed and about thirty men for the slaughtering.

The entire territory of the Wainwright Buffalo Park, 125,000 acres, is laid out on land particularly suited for buffalo. From the time they were brought to the Buffalo Park some twenty-five years ago, the herd has continued to thrive to such an extent that their numbers have increased almost thirty fold.

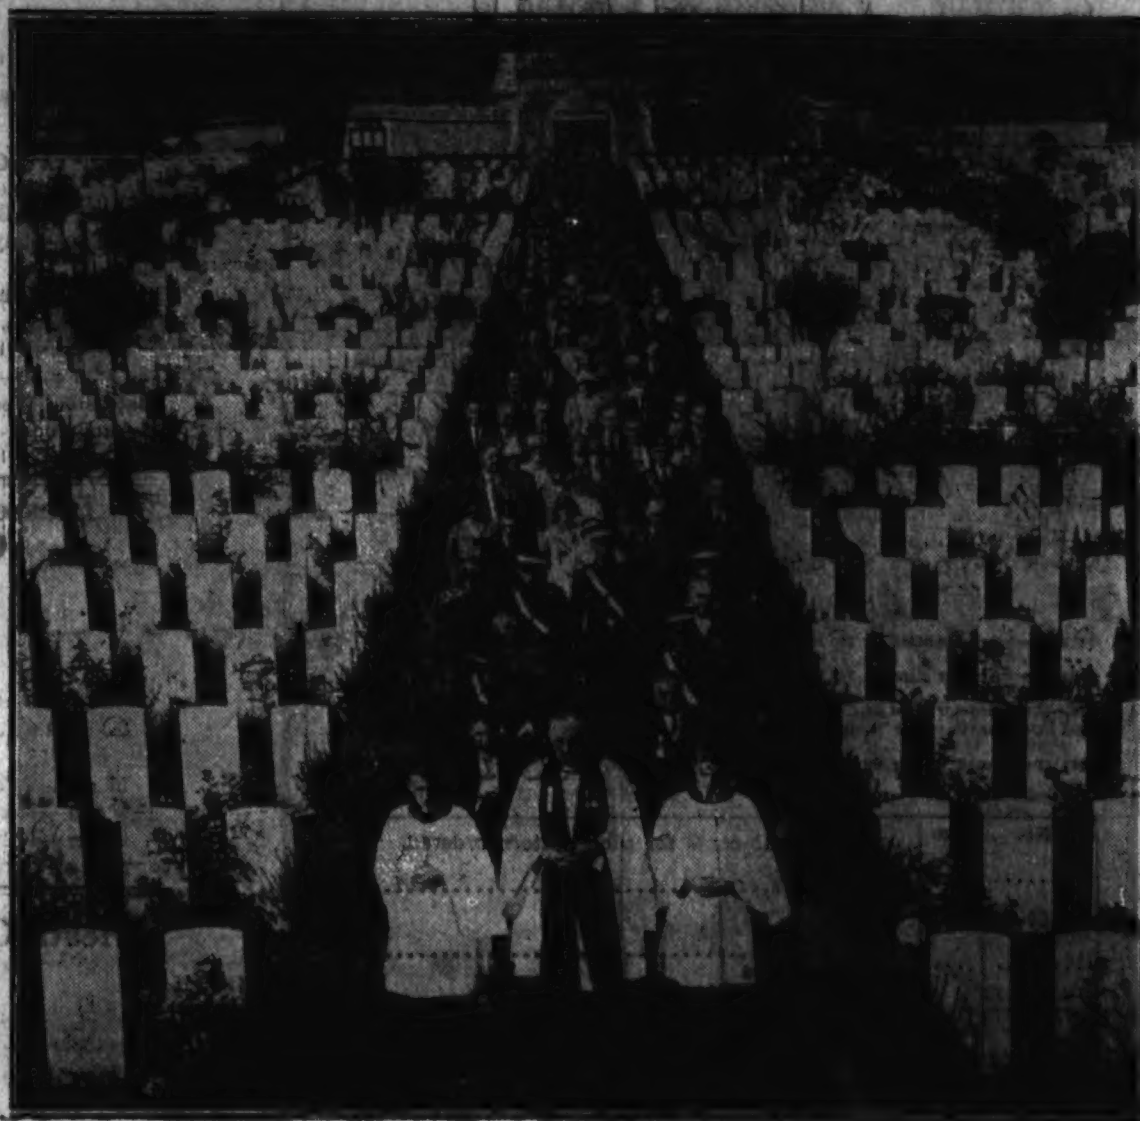

The animals are kept within the confines of the Park by a steel wire fence nine feet high, while fireguards twenty feet wide plowed on each side of the enclosing fence serve as protection for the herd against the menace of fire. By means of cross fencing, a visitor's paddock at the Wainwright entrance of the Park is provided, in which are kept some seventy-five buffalo, and a number of elk, moose, deer and yak. Winter quarters from which the buffalo are excluded during the summer months, are fenced off from the main range. In the fall the cows with their calves are brought into this enclosure, where they find good pasture, while in severe weather they are fed hay and straw by the park attendants.

In 1925 1,634 surplus buffalo were taken from the Wainwright Park, branded, loaded into cars and taken as far north as Waterways, Alberta. Here they were transferred to scows and taken down the Athabasca river to the vicinity of Fitzgerald, Alberta where they were liberated.

Despite this depletion in numbers, the herd in the Buffalo Park continued to increase necessitating further reduction, and regularly conducted slaughters during the past five years have accounted for a further 5,000 buffalo. The herd still numbers over 7000 and it is estimated that the total increase has been almost 22,000 from the original numbers of slightly over 700.

GRIM REMINDER OF GREAT WAR AT YPRES

Limbless British war veterans were taken back to France recently to visit the graves of their war-time companions. Above is a scene of the Tyne Cot cemetery at Ypres, at which place a week of festival was held. The scene shows the crippled veterans being led through the huge cemetery.

Some Interesting Facts About Our Local Buffalo Herd

An adult male buffalo measures about nine feet from the muzzle to the insertion of the tail, and twelve and one-half feet to the end of the tail including hairs, which extend fifteen inches beyond the vertebra. The height of the animal at the highest part of the hump is about five feet one nine inches, and at the hips about four feet, eight inches. The female is slightly smaller. A full grown bull weighs over 1,800 pounds.

The horns of the male animal are short, and very thick at the base, and rapidly taper to a sharp point, while their direction is outward and upward finally curving inward. Those of the females are much smaller at the base but nearly as long as in males, and they taper very gradually. The hoofs are short and broad, those of the forefeet abruptly rounded at the end; those of the hind feet much narrower and more pointed. The muzzle, or upper lip is broad and smooth, having much the same form as in the domestic ox. The short tail has the long hairs restricted to a tuft at the end. In winter the head, neck, legs and whole under parts are blackish brown, the upper surface of the body lighter. The color becomes gradually lighter towards spring and a tuft of hair falls off. Soon great bare patches appear all over the body. Streamers of loosened hair trail after the animal, presenting an unkempt, tattered appearance. By frequent wallowing and rubbing against trees and bushes, the animal finally manages to scrape himself clean, and emerges a study in bronze. The hair gradually begins to come in and by autumn is a soft brown.

The young calf at birth is nearly a uniform light chestnut brown, but towards autumn the light yellowish color is replaced by the darker brown that characterizes the older animals. The younger animals are darker after the first few months than they are later in life, for at middle age the coat, especially over the shoulders, becomes lighter in appearance, which increases with age.

Mr. Hamilton, an employee of the Park, sustained a painful injury last week, when a horse he was riding while herding buffalo, stepped into a hole, fell and pinned Mr. Hamilton to the ground. His foot was badly twisted and he is now under doctor's care.

John McCormack Sings at Wedding of His Daughter

LONDON. — John McCormack's voice filled the Brompton Oratory recently when he sang at the wedding of his only daughter, Gwendolyn, to Edward Pyke.

The famous Irish tenor stood in the gallery high above the congregation of 2,000 and sang with his eyes fixed on the bowed heads of his daughter and the bridegroom kneeling at the altar rail.

Sings With Deep Emotion
He sang with an emotion rare even for him. Tears came to his eyes as well as those of the listeners as the last notes of "Ave Maria" died away in a hushed church. Then he turned and rejoined the bride.

While invitations were required, the oratory was crowded far beyond its capacity, many uninvited persons having remained in their seats after the Mass preceding the wedding. Hundreds more, who had been unable

Cars Wrecked In Collision

VERMILION.—No one was injured but two Ford V8s were badly damaged in a head-on collision which occurred on the highway six miles west of town on Friday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Ostry were returning to their home here, driving Ben Ostry's coupe, while Mr. and Mrs. MacCully of Neilburg, Saskatchewan, driving a new sedan on its first trip, were proceeding westward. What caused the accident is not clear, but the cars met head on, with disastrous consequences. Both vehicles had their frames badly bent, front axles ruined, radiators punctured, fenders, headlights smashed and a multitude of other damage done. They were towed to local garages where repairs are being effected.

Sterilization Evils Cited By Writer In Secular Paper

Britain Criticizes Proposal to Pass Laws to Allow Politicians to Attempt to 'Improve on Nature'—Heredity Theories Questioned.

LONDON, England.—An important criticism of sterilization, by the Birmingham Post, printed in view of the policy of the German Nazi Government, declares that "in the present state of our knowledge and ignorance we should be very slow in allowing politicians to pass laws for 'improving on nature'."

"The idea behind the suggestion is one which any biologist must regard with a certain amount of respect. It is believed that by the application of what we know about heredity and allied subjects it is possible to produce a healthy race, to eliminate the unfit and to supplement by purposive human action the work of natural selection."

Knowledge Lacking
"Unfortunately when we come to examine the question in a strictly scientific spirit, a great many doubts present themselves. What we know about biology is much more considerable than it was, but it remains a small affair compared with what we don't know, and even where we have knowledge we have not always power."

"The idea that by eugenic regulations we can eliminate disease and produce a perfectly 'fit' race must be pronounced, on scientific grounds, to be a sentimental delusion."

"Heredity, is, of course, a fact, but there are very few hereditary diseases. Any individual has qualities inherited from a number of ancestors, and there are certain traits which we know will be found in a definite number of descendants. We do not know, however, to express it crudely, in what particular person any set of characteristics will be found, nor how they will be mixed."

"We used to hear a good deal about what was called the 'neuropathic inheritance,' but this has now reached that stage in the history of scientific terms in which it is used less and less by scientists and more and more by journalists."

'Stockyard Principles'
"Very much the same biological make-up may be found in a poet, an artist, a dipsomaniac and a lunatic, and it is not easy, even in theory to see how we could aim at eliminating one of these classes by treating humanity on stockyard principles without also doing away with the others. If eugenics could do all that its most fanciful advocates believe, it might result in a race of fine animals but there will not be unanimous agreement that a Camera or a Dampsey is of more ultimate value to the race than a 'neurotic' Shelley, a tubercular Keats or Stevenson or a deformed Byron.

"The majority of feeble-minded persons are not the offspring of feeble-minded persons, so that sterilization in this case would hardly touch the fringe of the problem. If we make a study of family histories, we shall find genius and idiocy, crime, and sanctity mixed in the bewildering way in which Nature works, and it is not easy to destroy the weeds and spare the grain."

"It should be remembered that Nature herself is always protecting the race. Ignorant people speak as though there were some natural tendency for illness, and degeneracy to propagate abnormally. The opposite is the case. That great authority, the late Sir Frederick Mott, was persuaded, as the result of extensive investigations, that insanity tends not to run beyond three generations, because there is either regression to the normal type or the stock dies out. If we listen to the alarmists and faddists, we must wonder why the race has not died out. The great racial poisons—syphilis, tuberculosis, etc.—are declining, not increasing. If nervous and mental instability seem to be prominent at present, this is much more rationally explained by the exaggerated artificiality of the worry of modern life than by any fanciful theories of inheritance."

'Improving on Nature'
"We should be careful about rushing at conclusions from the existence of a number of cases of the same trouble in any family. It does not necessarily mean heredity. Recently a racing motorist died, and it was pointed out that his father and I think, two brothers had met violent deaths. Nobody will argue that 'liability to accidental end' is an inherited quality! If, however, the coincidence had been some form of disease many people would have dogmatized about its transmissibility. We must not exaggerate 'coincidence,' but it is equally foolish to ignore it."

The writer then goes on to say that in the present state of our knowledge we should be slow in allowing the politicians to pass laws for 'improving on nature,' and he concludes:

"There are people who ought not to marry, and now and then a flagrant case of bad social conscience may incline us to sympathy with the eugenicists. It may well be, however, that in general compulsion would do more harm than good."

Mr. and Mrs. Dave Mathers and family, after 17 years residence in Wainwright, left this week for Edmonton. Mr. Mathers, who is with the C.N.R., was transferred there earlier in the year.

PROGRESS

It surely is a sight for sore eyes to see the side walls of the new curling rink being placed in position. This is a tangible proof of what cooperation can do in the way of building up a town. It is an external and explicit act of faith in the future of Wainwright.

At different times this year we have written about the progress made in the matter of building up a nice town to live in. On our streets, trees were planted, the merchants have cooperated to build a large display signboard on the Main Street, a quick glance being sufficient for the visitor to see just what we have here in the social, religious, educational and commercial lines. The hockey club plan on having a regulation size rink for the winter sports and now the Curling Club have taken it upon themselves to build a fine new curling rink. More power to those who have helped this work along.

We believe, however, that the town streets could be kept in better shape and that sidewalks could be built on Main Street at least. Perhaps this will come, now that the residents have made this definite move to make this town known for its commercial, educational and recreational merits.

"DEBUNKING THE DEBUNKERS"

Critics of the Edmonton Civic Relief administration became so persistent because of and vociferous during the past few months that an investigation was ordered which is still in progress. To date, nothing of any serious consequence has been proved to show negligence or inefficiency on the part of relief officials. Many of the critics were invited to state their grievances but in nearly all cases it was found that their statements were unfounded. Indeed, the investigation shows that our civic relief administration is in capable hands.

During the investigation the searchlight was turned many times on the critics themselves and some of the disclosures came as a surprise to many. Some of the most loud-mouthed of the carper fraternity were receiving and had been receiving for years very comfortable relief amounts. And the actual work they had given in return was so small that one would think that they would hesitate before appearing for questioning anywhere.

We think that too much publicity is often given to carper irresponsibilities. The daily press would do well to cut down on space allotted to such people. It is rather easy to gather a cloud over the heads of any section of administration, a cloud that is not often easy to dispel.

Criticism of the right kind is always in order. The criticism of designing individuals of the second type should be given short shrift. Selected.

HOW AND WHAT TO SERVE

Apple Ginger

4 lbs. sour apples
4 lemons
2 lbs. sugar
1 oz. white ginger root
Pare, core, and chop apples; wash and remove seeds and chop. Add chopped ginger and sugar. Cook very slowly four hours. Pour into glasses and cover.

Apple Marmalade

Apples with considerable flavor are best for marmalade. Wash, core and cut apples in slices; put in kettle and add enough water to keep apples from burning. Cook slowly until mushy, press through sieve, add equal amounts of sugar and apples, and flavor with orange or lemon juice. Cook until water is evaporated and then will glasses and cover.

Preserved Apples

4 lbs. apples
3 cups water
4 lbs. sugar
Rind and juice of 6 lemons
Wash, pare and quarter apples; keep in water until ready to use. Cook sugar and water five minutes. Add apples, cook until tender and add lemon juice and rind. Fill jars with apples, then with syrup, and seal.

Apple or Crab Apple Jelly

Wash and wipe fruit. Remove stems; cut in pieces and put in preserving kettle, nearly cover with cold water; cook very slowly until apples are tender. Pour into jelly bag and drain thoroughly, but do not squeeze. Measure juice, allow one pound of sugar to every pint of juice. Boil juice 20 minutes; add sugar with has been heated on a platter in the oven; stir until sugar is dissolved; boil five minutes or until it jellies. Skim when necessary. Have jelly glasses standing in hot water, pour jelly into them and let stand.

Apple Sauce

Wash, wipe, quarter, core and pare eight apples. Add one cup boiling water, cover pan and boil until apples are soft. Remove from fire and add 1 cup sugar. Mix well into apples. Cinnamon, cloves or nutmeg may be added if desired. A little lemon juice added will hasten the boiling of the apples.

Pickling Fruit-Vegetables

Allow six pounds fruit to three pounds of sugar, one ounce each of the following: Cloves, allspice, mace, cinnamon and one nutmeg. Put fruit into kettle with alternate layers of sugar and spices, and add vinegar. Let all boil five minutes, then skim out fruit and pack in glass jars. Let syrup boil until thick and pour it over fruit. Bottle tight and examine from time to time. If they show signs of fermenting open jars and set them uncovered in kettle of water and heat till contents of jars begin to bubble, then seal again. Sour pickles should always be cooked in granite or agateware kettles, and if desired green, put on to cook in cold vinegar and brought gradually to the boiling point. Alum added to the pickles keeps them crisp.

Dutch Apple Cake

3 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 egg
Apples
2 cups flour
3 teaspoons shortening
About 1 cup milk
Sugar

Sift together flour, salt and baking powder; rub in shortening and mix to light dough with beaten egg and milk; roll out 1" inch thick and lay on greased, shallow baking pan; pare and core apples; cut into eighths, lay pieces on dough; sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon to taste and bake about 1 hour in moderate oven; serve hot with whipped cream.

Apple and Mint Salad

1 1/2 cups apple, diced
1 1/2 cups celery, cut in pieces
1 teaspoon salt
1 1/2 teaspoon finely chopped mint
Combine apple and celery with salt and enough Mayonnaise Dressing to hold them together. Arrange on crisp lettuce leaves and sprinkle with chopped mint. Serve with extra Mayonnaise Dressing.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Wrap leftover pie crust and pastry in a damp napkin, or cheesecloth wrung out of cold water, and place it in the refrigerator. It will keep for a week or more.

Instead of grating onions for onion juice, cut the onion in half and press it through the lemon squeezer; the juice will be of better flavor and no tears will be shed in the operation.

To make a slice of ham exceptionally tender, soak it in milk overnight. In the morning wipe it dry and dip it in flour before frying. Never sprinkle pongoe. Roll in a towel while wet and iron while damp. A few drops of olive oil added to hard water will make the soap lather better and keep the skin from getting rough.

Put salt into the water in which you bathe sore, tender feet. It will help to soothe and harden them.

No Love Making

By Request

Viola felt extremely depressed on that glorious, late August morning, as she sat alone on the beach and watched gay parties of young people enjoying themselves! It is hard on a girl if, after saving up for a fortnight at a really nice boarding-house, and getting together a simple but becoming outfit, she finds herself having the dullest possible time! May Davis, the girl from her office who'd been coming with Viola to Silverbay, had developed appendicitis at the last moment, and had to go to the hospital instead. Had May been with her, Viola would have been tolerably happy, only tolerably, because being an honest girl, she admitted to herself that what she really wanted was a young man to go about with. Isn't that what every normal girl does want, on a holiday, and, indeed, at any other time?

What annoyed Viola was the fact that there was an unattached man at "Sea-Edge" and a particularly well set-up, attractive young man. But he did not talk to anybody. He sat alone at a little table for meals; he went out by himself; he never joined the other boarders in the evenings in the lounge or on the verandah.

Not that she blamed him. She'd never seen such a collection of "dud" people in her life! The only young ones in the place were two giggling school-girls and a young married couple who had eyes for no one but each other. The rest were dull couples and about half-a-dozen dreary spinsters.

Poor Viola felt sure that these spinsters were amused by the fact that though she and Douglas Hill were the only young, unattached people in the house, they did not get friendly. The young man gave her a shy nod when he met her on the stairs, but that was all. And she was a very pretty girl, and wore pretty frocks and this was the holiday that she'd dreamed of, for so many months.

She'd got her new black bathing-suit with her this morning, but—where was the fun in bathing alone? How she envied all those laughing splashing young people round the raft.

"Er . . . good morning, Miss Darrell," said a voice. Viola looked up in surprise, to see the young man of whom she'd been thinking, standing beside her. His attractive, nicely-tanned face looked shy.

"Good morning," said Viola. "Isn't it a lovely morning? May I get a chair and sit here, by you?" Naturally, Viola said, "Do!" She was delighted. So he was going to be friendly at last! He got a deck-chair from the man and set it beside hers. She saw that he, too, was equipped with a bathing-suit.

He said: "Are you going to bathe?"

"Yes . . . I think so."

"I want to. But it's poor fun by oneself."

"That's what I was thinking!" she agreed. "I was feeling blue!"

She told him about May and her appendicitis.

"That's more or less what happened to me," he said. "My fiancée and her brothers were to come down but their father took ill and had to have an operation, so they couldn't bet away."

"Hard luck!" said Viola.

His fiancée! So he was engaged! Viola had a sense of humour, and she had seen the irony of this. The only young man in the place was engaged to another girl! How bitter May would be when she wrote and told her. May always deplored the fact that one never met a really, nice attractive man who wasn't either married or engaged to someone.

She thought that she understood why this young man had remained so aloof. He was the sort of man who felt that as he was engaged, he ought not to go about with another girl. How unlike many other men, who would have suppressed the fact that they were engaged, and had a realisable flirtation with the only girl in the place. What else they would ask—was the seaside for? Not so Douglas Hill! How pathetically eager he had been to let her know that he was engaged; if I were another kind of girl, thought Viola, I'd thrump up a fiancée, just to show him that I don't want any love-making, either. But she wasn't that sort of a girl.

Anyway, here they were, talking together in a very pleasant, frank way. He was telling her that he was a medical student and would be taking his finals in October. He and his parents lived at Wimbledon. Viola told him that she was all alone in the world, and lived in a Girls'

By Clare Thornton

Hostel in Kensington, and worked in the West-End office of a well-established firm of solicitors. She liked her work, and the Hostel wasn't so bad, because she'd made friend with several girls there.

Viola had a happy disposition, and it reflected itself in her face. It was a very pretty face. Her eyes were the colour of her name-flower; her pretty shingle was golden-brown; there was a becoming colour in her cheeks, brought there by three days of sunshine and sea air. She wore a blue-check cotton dress and a small beige straw hat. The young man's gaze was admiring, and she felt her spirits rise. Although there was no romance it would be undeniably pleasant if he were to go about with her while she was here. She felt sure that he would prove companionable. He said, in his shy way: "One feels so terribly out of it, at the seaside, unless one's with people. Look at that jolly party on the raft."

"I know!" sighed Viola, "I've been feeling inclined to take the next train back to town."

"It would be awfully jolly," he said timidly, "if . . . if we could go about together, while we are here."

"I'd like to," said Viola simply.

"Thanks, awfully! I say, don't you think, if we are going to bathe, we ought to book our machines now? There's such a crowd a bit later."

So they did.

The difference it made, to have a very attractive man bathing with one, swimming out to the raft with one, giving one hints on diving! Her two former bathes, all by herself, had been so dull. And he was so very nice, now that he'd got over his first shyness. So simple, jolly and easy to get on with. He had a good sense of humour too. It was the greatest fun.

As they walked up to "Sea-Edge" he said: "I say, do you mind if I ask Mrs. Smith to put me at your table for meals?"

"I think it would be nice," she replied. "It's dull, eating by oneself."

Viola was too sensible a girl to care what the other people thought, but she was mildly interested at the interest aroused among the other boarders by the fact that she and Mr. Hill were now at the same table. She thought that some of the spinsters looked a little chagrined.

The excellent food provided by the proprietors of "Sea-Edge" tasted twice as nice now that one had, opposite to one the jolly brown face and frank blue eyes of Douglas Hill.

In the afternoon, they went for a walk on the cliffs. They discovered several tastes in common. They both loved the country, and in the same way. Viola had been brought up in Sussex. To her, the countryside in every mood was a thing of delight. So it was to him.

They loved music, "good" music as well as jazz. He, it appeared, before he'd got engaged, had spent many happy hours exploring unknown London. Viola told him how, on Saturdays, she sometimes dragged the frankly bored May to visit City Churches, and discover queer little tucked-away City streets. He was pleased to find someone who shared this interest, and admitted, a little wistfully, that Ruby did not care for "that sort of thing." Ruby, Viola supposed, was his fiancée.

After tea, May wrote a long letter to May all about "my young man" who is 'somebody else's property.' She wrote humorously, and at length.

It was fun to put on one's most becoming evening-frock—pale green georgette—and to know that one looked one's best. It was a case of "half a loaf" thought the philosophic Viola. Another girl's man was better than no man at all!

After dinner, they went to a Pierrot show. It was a poor show, but they laughed a lot and enjoyed themselves.

At the end of four days, Viola faced the fact that she was becoming fonder of Douglas Hill than a girl should be of another girl's fiancée. Well, what could she do about it?

Nothing! Although he did not often speak of Ruby, he must be deeply in love with her, since he'd been prepared to spend his holiday without speaking to another girl. There hadn't been, in his manner to her, anything in the least degree sentimental. "Oh yes," she thought, "he's safely in love and that's why he can be friendly to me! Well, she could be friendly too, but—it wasn't going to be easy feeling as she did."

Glorious August and early September days passed in a flash. Bathers in the morning in a blue unrippled sea; walks on the cliffs in the afternoon or trips on coaches through the pretty country; tennis once in the grounds of the Grand Hotel; dancing at night at the Pavilion on the Pier; strolls on the Promenade while the band played in the Cliff Gardens . . . O, the fun it was. But alas—there could be no romance in it!

There was the thought of this Ruby always stealing grimly between them. Viola began to hate the thought of the girl. Oh, it was cruel, that just the very man who seemed to be made for her, should be engaged to someone else! Some of the men in the office had liked Viola and she'd had to show them, as a girl knows how to, that it wasn't "any good!" Not for one of them, and they'd been quite personable youths, although none of them had ever caused her heart to beat faster. But it raced and thudded when Douglas Hill's arm was around her as they danced.

She'd gleaned facts about Ruby. She was a well-off girl and lived in a fine house at Hampstead. Her father was recovering quickly from his operation and, she and her brothers might be coming down to Silverbay next week. If they did so he would stay on, as he had another week's holiday; if the y didn't he'd go back Monday. Viola was going back on Monday.

In her letters Viola didn't tell May that she'd fallen in love with Douglas. She wrote flippantly about the affair. But she was beginning to suffer very sharply, and to long for Monday to come. It was cruel to have to see him so often, and to know that he could never be anything to her.

It was on the Saturday that there her feel breathless with excitement, occurred to her a thought that made that filled her with hope.

Suppose, suppose that there was no Ruby! Suppose that this shy young man was so afraid of girls, so certain that if he got friendly with a girl she'd expect him to make love to her, that he had invented a fiancée in order to safeguard himself.

The more she thought it over the more sure Viola was that her theory was correct. It would account for the fact that Douglas mentioned his fiancée so seldom, that he seemed to show no eagerness about the arrival of the post that is generally shown by one who expects letters from his beloved . . .

Then, if he were free, she might do her best to make him care for her. Hitherto, she hadn't done her best. She had been the "jolly pal". She'd practised none of the arts of attraction that even a girl not versed in coquetry knows how to practise!

But—if there were no Ruby, she was free to practise them. In other words, she might, "go ahead and vamp him."

There was, alas, only one day left in which to set about the "vamping" process!

Sunday was as lovely a day as all the other days had been. Viola and Douglas bathed in the morning and sat in the sun on the beach, and she wore her very prettiest frock, a green linen one that suited her coloring perfectly. Alas for her plans to "vamp" the young man! As bad luck would have it, one of the worst bored in the boarding house, a widower of sixty, came and sat with them for an hour-and-a-half and she got no talk alone with Douglas.

In the afternoon, they walked by the cliffs to Sandstead, a small but very fashionable resort about four miles from Silverbay. They intended to get a 'bus back. It was a lovely walk. When they arrived at Sandstead, Douglas insisted upon taking Viola to tea at the Links Hotel, a very smart place, she'd heard. She scolded him for his extravagance, but she enjoyed having tea on the terrace over-looking the sea in company with a number of the best-dressed people she'd ever seen.

Douglas and she were amused, watching these people, and discussing them. Viola had exchanged her green linen of the morning for a sleeveless white frock, with which she wore a big white hat. She knew that she had never looked so pretty. If her mirror had not assured her of it, the young man's brief, scared glances would have done so. She looked across the table at him, and said: "I'll never forget this holiday! It's been really wonderful!"

"It's been wonderful for me, too," He looked uneasy. His eyes dropped. (To be continued)

Getting Started

The trouble with many people is that it takes them so long to get started. Some students who are at their desk at the stroke of nine, are not really ready for work for more than an hour or two later. Their thoughts are still occupied with the things of yesterday. Much of the golden morning has gone to waste before they really begin to give their attention to the study in hand.

A great many good resolutions take shape in youthful hearts that are not realized till long after. A youth says to himself, "This habit of mine is a weakness that is going to interfere seriously with my success. I must overcome it." But he does not put the resolution into effect immediately.

Weeks, months, year even, go by and when at last he wakes up to the need of doing something, he has lost much precious time that never can be recalled. Learn when you start to start with all there is of you, and when you stop, to stop completely. The people who take so long in getting started constitute no small proportion of the failures.—Exchange.

CRICKETS OR CRITICS

The cricket on the hearth is out of fashion. The hearth fire is rarer still. But the critic on the hearth is still up to date.

The two are somewhat alike. Once started, the cricket keeps up a steady chirping. The family critic steadily nags. Early and late there is some little thing to find fault with, something to object to, something to complain of.

The cricket on the hearth was supposed to be an emblem of good luck, but the critic on the hearth, some one who is always scolding and grumbling, is the worst luck imaginable.—Selected.

STREUSEL CAKE—a favorite ROYAL YEAST CAKE recipe. Easy to make, delicious!

To 1 1/2 cups Royal Yeast Sponge add 2 tablespoons butter, creamed; 1/2 cup light brown sugar, 1 egg well beaten, 2 cups flour to make soft dough. Knead lightly. Place in greased covered bowl in warm place. Let rise until double in bulk (about 1 1/2 hours). Roll out dough 1/2 inch thick, prick with fork, brush top with melted butter and sprinkle with streusel topping. Let rise in warm place about 30 minutes. Bake at 350° F. to 400° F. Makes 4 cakes.

STREUSEL TOPPING: Cream 1/4 c. butter with 1/4 c. sugar and mix with 1/2 c. flour, 1/2 c. bread crumbs and 1 tsp. cinnamon. Stir until dry and crumbly.

*ROYAL YEAST SPONGE

Soak 1 Royal Yeast Cake in 1/2 pint lukewarm water for 15 minutes. Dissolve 1 tablespoon sugar in 1/2 pint milk. Add to dissolved yeast cake. Add 1 quart bread flour. Beat thoroughly. Cover and let rise overnight to double in bulk, in warm place free from draughts. Makes 5 to 6 cups of batter.

Our free booklet, "The Royal Yeast Baking Book" will show you how to use Royal Yeast Cakes in a simple, pleasant way to take them.

THE C.W.L. HOLD FINE CHICKEN SUPPER
A very fine chicken supper was served to some two hundred or more in the Masonic Hall last Saturday evening by the ladies of the local subdivision of the Catholic Women's League.

It is traditional in this town that the League Chicken Supper is an event not to be missed and the tradition was a proven fact when such large numbers came to partake of the bounteous meal served by the younger set of the parish under the direction of the seniors in the League.

Much credit is due these good ladies and their dainty assistants for their fine work and they, in turn, wish to thank all those who helped in any way to make it such a splendid success.

HI-SCHOOL HI-LIGHTS

Teacher—Use fiddlestick in a sentence.
Jean D.—If the bed isn't long enough my fiddlestick out.

We notice that one of our Grade X students (not mentioning any names) whose initials are Phil Cumming has a hard time keeping his notes up to date.

Oral Compositions have begun in Grade XII, and the future R. B. Bennett's and Agnes McPhail's proudly speak their pieces every morning. We wonder if they have that sick feeling as Mr. King calls them up, and if they think of those immortal lines: "Into the valley of Death, rode the sick hundred."

The teacher had just finished a lecture on "The manufacture of hologna".

Chf.—How did you like the lecture?
Eileen F.—Oh, he's too full of his subject.

For I dip't into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw a vision of the world in all the wonder that will be.
And in my imagination there passed a grand review.
Of all the former pupils of Wainwright High School.

There Cliff and Iris Bradley, their little children told

Of how he used to broad-jump in the brave days of old;
And Joseph looks at Eileen, and cracks a toothless smile.

When he tells his many offsprings how he ran the half-mile.

Then I walk down a busy thoroughfare, with the traffic roaring by,
A fearful drone of engines comes from the cloudless sky;

As my gaze upward lingers, a monster whizzes past,
"That's a Promiser Aircraft Plane," they say, "And boy, is it fast!"

Rudd and Monty's Grocery store is nice in black and silver,
And who should I find working there but Mr. Irvine Milner.

But now my brain is all awry, and everything goes black,
Dr. Wallace rushes up, and quickly brings me back.

I go to the old age pension house, and ring the bell—"Ding, ding,"

And someone opens up the door; Gosh it's Mr. King!

He tells me that Warden Thoreson, of the new Wainwright Pen, Has a new kind of punishment for law-offending men:

He simply gives them a problem, 98 to the 9th or so

And all the cell-mates tear their hair, and scream in all their woe.

With the shock of this strange tale, I just drop down dead,

And Janitor Wiley picks me up, and lays me on the bed,

And Undertaker Middlemass, in a big black shiny hearse

Takes me over to Potter's Field—it's bad, but it might have been worse.

Parson Winsor reads the prayer, and lowers me into the ground;

Private Walker on his horn, the Last Post does sound.

But now I wake up with a start, and my heart is filled with fear,

For Mr. Thoreson's booming voice is sounding in my ear:

"What are you doing now?" he asks, as I wipe the sleep from my eyes.

"You're going to do a problem to-night, and let me put you wise,

"You are now in a class-room, as you can plainly see,

"And while you're in this class-room you're going to listen to me!"

—And That's That!

Now we know why Rusty didn't come to school for awhile. His Composition II expressed his thoughts: "I am coming to think that school isn't what its cracked up to be. I have returned for a day and a half. I am tired of sitting in this hard desk and wish that I was either at a show or some place of interest, even back threshing."

Mr. King (absent-minded professor), commenced teaching Geography to the Trig. pupils while Mr. Thoreson was absent a few minutes.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH

On Sunday last St. Thomas Church held its annual Harvest Festival. The church was very beautiful with its decorations of grain, fruit, vegetables, flowers, foliage, etc., which were the gifts of the parishioners. The Reredos and Supertable which was kindly built by Mr. T. Lissimore for the Open Air Service was again in use, with the addition of appropriate texts and shelves. All three services were well attended, and the number of communicants exceeded that of many years past. Appropriate messages were delivered by the Vicar. On Sunday next Oct. 8th, the Harvest Octave will be closed with Holy Communion at 8 a.m. and Evensong and address at 7.30. The special preacher for this service will be the Rev. Geoffrey Wilson of Edgerton. Owing to weather conditions the Harvest Festival which was to be held at Gilt Edge on Sunday last was postponed to Sunday Oct. 15th at 3 p.m.

Battle Heights and Irma will hold their Harvest Festival on Sunday next Oct. 8th, when the special preacher will be the Rev. Wilson of Edgerton.
St. Thomas W. A. will meet on Wednesday (tonight) at the Vicarage.
Rev. C. N. Bateman will exchange duties with Rev. Wilson on Sunday next and will hold service at Heath and Edgerton.
